Latvian Gambit Openings

Latvian Gambit. The Latvian Gambit is a very aggressive opening defense for black against one of the more common openings for white. This opening is not seen much at master level chess as most masters refuse to give up material early on in a game. Below master level play there are strong advocates of the Latvian Gambit and I personally enjoy the possibilities that arise from this opening.

Latvian Gambit - Chess Openings

The Latvian Gambit (or Greco Countergambit) is a chess opening characterised by the moves: 1. e4 e5 2. Nf3 f5! It is one of the oldest chess openings, having been analysed in the 17th century by Gioachino Greco, after whom it is sometimes named. The opening has the appearance of a King's Gambit with colours reversed. It is an aggressive but rather dubious choice for Black which often leads to wild and tricky positions.

Latvian Gambit - Wikipedia

The Latvian Gambit is an uncommon King's Pawn Opening that begins 1. e4 e5 2. Nf3 f5!? Nf3 f5!?! This pawn sacrifice is an aggressive attempt from black to take control of the game, immediately putting the question to white's e4 pawn.

Latvian Gambit - Chess Pathways

Before we start the discussion about the Latvian Gambit (1 e4 e5 2 Nf3 f5), I have a confession to make. I never really trusted in this opening. It is one thing to play a risky King's Gambit and it is a totally different thing to play the same King's Gambit being a tempo down (I am sure most of the readers noted that if we look at the position after 1.e4 e5 2. f4 Nf6 and ask Black to play a second move in a row, then it will be exactly the Latvian Gambit with reversed colors).

The Latvian counter-gambit is rare and occurs in less than 1 in 100 games. From the data, you can expect that White will have a 50.93% chance of winning, while black should have a 49.07% chance of winning. Even though most players have probably never seen this opening, (so you can catch them off guard), the edge that White has is small (less than 2%).

The Latvian is a great opening for beginners who still need to work on their tactics. Of course, you will probably lose your first 50 games or so (even after preparation), but after that... In response to another reviewer's comments regarding this gambit versus Fritz, well of course this isn't the opening against a computer.

Latvian Gambit Openings - CalMatters

The Latvian Gambit is a high risk option for Black when White tries to head into a Ruy Lopez Opening or Giuoco Piano. We're swinging over from the Benko Gambit on the queenside to the kingside now. The Latvian changes the course of the game completely. We start out with the routine 1.e4 e5 2.Nf3. All fairly reasonable but suddenly it changes.

Latvian Gambit leads to Extremely Sharp Lines

The Latvian Gambit is the sort of kooky opening about which minor masters love to write creepy little pamphlets. Well, the author is no minor master (he's a GM, in fact) and this is no creepy little pamphlet, but, rather a carefully prepared monograph on an opening so amusingly bizarre as to put one in positions that are a world apart from ordinary chess.

The Latvian gambit: 3.Bc4 is very rare and occurs in less than 1 in 1000 games. From the data, you can expect that White will have a 46.38% chance of winning, while Black should have a 53.62% chance of winning. Because of the fact that most players have probably never seen this opening and that White has such a low expected chance of winning, it may be well worth it to keep this variation in your back pocket.
